of the program as misguided and urged the European allies to join in the technological research. He said the most pressing reason for developing research on the SDI program, popularly known as "star wars," was that Moscow was already well ahead in developing space defense systems such as lasers, nuclear particle beams and kinetic energy weapons.

"They now possess groundbased lasers that could interfere with our satellites," he said, "and by the late 1980s they could have prototypes of ground-based lasers able to hit ballistic missiles."

Mr. Weinberger rejected arguments by some European opponents of the program that such a system would shield only the United States and effectively "decouple" American defense from that of its European allies.

Mr. Weinberger said Washington was still eager for allies to join in SDI research, but he refused to be drawn into a debate that has gone on for months in West Germany on whether to sign a government accord or let companies sign up independently.

NATO Proposes to Cut Troop Levels in Europe To Unblock Vienna Talks

By William Drozdiak

VIENNA - The North Atlantic Treaty Organization unveiled Thursday a new proposal for troop reductions in Central Europe that seeks to break the deadlock over East-West talks on conventional force levels by adopting a frame-work suggested by the Warsaw

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain and Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany have persisted for months in urging a dramatic new Western proposal at the Vienna talks, according to senior Western diplomats.

The new proposal quickly acquired widespread support among NATO governments because of the belief that bolder, more imaginative steps were necessary to restore public faith in arms control and to recapture the initiative from Moscow after a spate of Soviet offers to freeze or reduce nuclear arms testing and development.

The West's new proposal "sailed through NATO in record time once the summit concentrated everyone's minds," a senior Western diplomat said. "It is hard to believe we would have gotten one before Christmas without the summit." Ambassador Michael Alexander of Britain declared Thursday that the NATO countries had now adapted their position to such an extent that they had established 16 concession by dropping a demand extent that they had established 16 for prior agreement on the size of agreement with the War-East-bloc forces stationed in the treaty on troop cuts in Europe. PLO Official Says Klinghoffer's Wife

UNITED NATIONS, New York - An official with the Palestine Liberation Organization has suggested that Leon Klinghoffer's wife may have pushed him over-board from the hijacked Italian liner, the Achille Lauro, so she could collect his insurance.

"It might be his wife who pushed him overboard in order to get his insurance," Mr. Kaddoumi told a gathering of UN leaders and diplo-mats. "Nobody has the evidence that he was killed."

According to U.S. officials, the Palestinian gunmen who hijacked the ship and held more than 500 people hostage for two days shot Mr. Klinghoffer and tossed his body and his wheelchair overboard. After the body was found, the U.S. government said an autopsy indicated he died from a bullet wound to the head.

Last month in Genoa, a prose tor said one of the hijackers had confessed to the killing.
In New York, a spokeswoman for Mr. Klinghoffer's wife, Man-

Qadhafi Eases Support for Chad Rebel DAKAR, Senegal (Reuters) — Libya's leader, Colonel Moamer Qadhafi, seeking for a way to end the stalemate in Chad's 20-year civil war, scaled down his commitment Thursday to former President Goukoun.

Oueddei, his rebel protege in north Chad.

After a three-day visit to Senegal for talks with President Abdou Diouf, chairman of the Organization of African Unity, Colonel Qadhafi told reporters he was prepared to treat Mr. Goukouni and Chad's president, Colonel Qadhafi, who in 1983 sent an estimated 6,000 troops into northern Chad to aid the rebels, has until now insisted that Mr. Goukouni was the only legitimate Chadian head of state. But he said no one could end the war "without recognizing the preponderant role of Libya," which claims an area of desert territory in northern Chad known as the Aouzon

Weinberger Shifts on Military Reform

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Under pressure from Congress, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger has said that he could accept changes in the structure of the U.S. armed forces, including proposals to strengthen the authority of the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The comments, in a letter Wednesday to senior members of the Senate and Committee on Armed Services, reflect a significant change in position. Testifying before the committee on Nov. 14, Mr. Weinberger opposed major changes in military structure.
In his letter, he noted that the Joint Chiefs of Staff helped the defense and helped supervise the way such orders were carried out. "The role of the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in this regard should be strengthened," he wrote, "provided it is clear that he acts on behalf of the JCS."

The threat from the organization seems to lie not so much in its sporadic and generally ineffective military activities as in its appeal to many black South Africans as the vanguard of a new era free of racial inferiority.

The contest in South Africa, thus, seems in part a collision of moods: black militancy sensing a victory pitted against white resolve to engineer the country's future.

Police in South Africa Use Whips, Tear Gas to Break Up Church Vigils

JOHANNESBURG - Police using whips and tear gas broke up candlelight vigils for imprisoned anti-apartheid activists and dispersed thousands of mourners at a black girl's funeral, witnesses said

National police headquarters in Pretoria reported stonings and gas-oline bombings late Wednesday and early Thursday in most of the mixed-race townships east of Cape

A spokesman denied charges that riot patrols broke up the candlelight services without provocation. He said the gatherings Wednesday night were illegal and police moved in after their warnings were ignored.

A witness said police fired tear gas Thursday morning to scatter about 5,000 mourners at the funeral of an 18-year-old girl shot by police last week in Soweto, the plack township near Johannesburg.

Police said that they warned the crowd that the gathering violated rules under a state of emergency that limits funeral attendance to 50

The Reverend Allan Boesak, a mixed-race religious leader, said he led a candlelight vigil Wednesday night at his church outside. Cape Town. Some of the 700 people who attended went outside and were hit by tear gas from an armored police vehicle across the street, he said. "I just think the South African police once again have shown mselves to be the pigs that the people think that they are," said Mr. Boesak, who faces subversion charges and is free on bail. "There is absolutely no excuse for what happened here."

Lieutenant Attie Laubscher, a police spokesman, said that about 200 people gathered outside Mr. Boesak's church and "police asked them to disperse. The majority did. Police then warned the rest who were standing around, and then used tear gas to disperse them."

The parish council sent a mes-sage to Louis Le Grange, South Africa's minister of law and order, demanding assurances that churches "may carry on with their worship without being threatened by your police."

It called the police assertion that a warning was given before the tear gas barrage a "blatant lie."

Uganda Says Guerrillas Attacked 2 Barracks

The Associated Press

KAMPALA, Uganda - The military government has an-nounced that guerrillas have unleashed a heavy artillery bombardment on two besieged army barracks in territory the insurgents control in southwestern Uganda.

The report Wednesday night on government-owned Uganda Radio coincided with verbal attacks between the two sides that have jeopardized peace negotiations. Kenvan officials mediating the talks in Nairobi had hoped an agreement would be signed this week.

The radio said the National Resistance Army "delivered over-whelming artillery gunfire" on the barracks in Masaka and Mbarara and other government positions. No details on casualties were given,

The radio quoted Uganda's head of state, Lieutenant General Tito Okello, as saying the leader of the guerrillas, Yoweri Museveni, "shall be held totally responsible for the consequences that may result."

Temples in Kyoto Bar Tourists to Protest City Tax

United Press Inte TOKYO - Buddhist priests closed 12 temples Thursday in the ancient capital of Kyoto to protest a city tax, leaving sightseers outside and tourist-related businesses facing hard times.

The doors were locked at some of the most popular of the 1,500 temples in and around the city, which is 250 miles (400 kilometers) south-west of Tokyo. They included the Kinkakuji golden temple and Kiyomizudera, which is known for its serene atmosphere and a sacred stream. The Kyoto Buddhist Association said the temples would remain closed indefinitely.

The dispute involves a decision last spring by the city to levy a tax on visitors at the temples. The Bud-dhist group opposes the levy; it argues that a tax on religious organizations violates Japan's constitu-

The commission, headed by former judge and former Labor minister, Jim McClelland, was set up by the government in July last year after allegations that soldiers and aborigines had become ill from radiation exposure.

The report also criticized Sir Robert Menzies, then Australia's prime minister, for lending test sites to Britain without consulting

It said the decision was made without the benefit of any scientific knowledge of the hazards involved and apparently without Sir Robert being informed of more than a broad outline of the British plans for a long-term program.

"I would like to see the British and Australians discuss whether it is necessary to clean the area up. I do not know that it is - it is 30 years ago."

Commentators forecast that Britain would proceed with caution because any move towards paying compensation could open the way for claims from British servicemen who said they suffered injuries as a result of taking part in the tests.

Now for the Follow-Up

Israel has apologized guardedly ("to the extent that it did take place") for running an American spy in the United States. In a statement that was a long time coming, it promised that "if the allegations are confirmed, those responsible will be brought to account." The confirmation is evidently to be left to an internal government inquiry, not to an independent one. In the statement, no specific assurances were given that the United States would retrieve stolen documents or interrogate two Israelis with diplomatic immunity who left the United States last week before U.S. officials could question them - although side assurances have since been reported on both counts.

Secretary of State George Shultz called it an "excellent statement." Certainly it serves the purpose of minimizing frictions with the United States and curtailing the possibility of further disclosures potentially embarrassing to both sides. But it leaves much unsaid. Unless damaging popular suspicions are to be fed, the follow-up will have to be much more inclusive.

The Israelis evidently feel that the fuller, more independent and more public the inquiry, the greater the chances of damage to the unity of their government as well as to the reputation of Israel and to the standing of its intelligence. The United States has another, conflicting set of interests: finding out what happened, who is responsible for it, how severe the security damage is and how comprehensive and widespread the Israeli operation was.

Spying on America, said the Israeli state-ment, "stands in total contradiction to our policy." Well - that is not quite right, either. The two countries have their own reasons for spying on each other plenty; these have nothing to do with being friends and everything to do with the way each defines its security needs.

But there is good reason to keep the forms of spying consistent with shared notions of propriety and common cause. In the Pollard operation, there was a loss of balance. Whether this was the work of a complicatous government or an uncontrolled rogue operator is interesting to Israelis and Americans in different ways. If an American passed secrets to the Israelis, he committed a serious crime. If Israelis conducted an intrusive intelligence operation, they committed a serious breach of the code of respect that ought to bind the two countries. That is what the Pollard affair is about.

The Makings of a Bhopal

Two thousand people were asphyxiated by the chemical that escaped a year ago from the Union Carbide plant in Bhopal, India. At the time, the lax training of the Indian staff and the excellent workplace safety record of the U.S. chemical industry suggested that no such accident was likely in America. Now that comforting inference seems too complacent.

Union Carbide officials assured Congress last March that "a Bhopal-type situation is inconceivable at Institute," the town in West Virginia where the company has a similar plant. But last Aug. 11 a chemical escaped from the Institute plant, injuring 135 people. And that was just one in a daily run of minor accidents involving toxic chemicals. A partial catalogue by the Environmental Protection Agency has tallied 6,928 accidents at American plants since 1980 — an average of five a day. Because the human suffering was so spread out, no one noticed the appalling cost: 139 deaths, 1,500 injuries, evacuation of at least 217,000 people. Many of these accidents involved the same kinds of neglect that caused the catastrophe at Bhopal — malfunctioning valves, overpressured tanks and unrepaired gauges. Safety training is taken seriously at many companies, like Du Pont, but at others it is little more than advice to wear a safety mask. An industry that condones so many small accidents is clearly vulnerable to catastrophe. especially when so many highly toxic chemi-cals are handled in plants situated in densely populated areas. All the ingredients for another Bhopal are present. Some 6,000 chemical plants operate in cities that house three-fourths of America's population. The plants handle and store so many toxic chemicals that no one has even begun to assess the risks. The EPA recently listed some 400 widely used chemicals of immediate hazard to human health. Yet some plants refuse even to reveal what toxic chemicals they keep. How can disaster be prevented? By better management and training in the industry; by emergency planning of local authorities; by making a federal agency responsible for safety. But the most effective prevention should come from the industry itself. Having protected its own workers so well, it ought to apply the same discipline to protecting the public.

Another Regan Incident

It is too late to save the president's re national security adviser, Robert C. McFar-lane, from what befell him at the White House. But there may still be time to save him from transformation by administration critics on the left into someone he never was - a kind of doomed and valiant closet dove shoved out by the forces of reaction and darkness. By about Friday, we should guess, the aforementioned dark forces will be striking back, countering that Mr. McFarlane, mourned by so many of the administration's ideological foes, can hardly have been the right man for the job.

Let us try a little pre-emptive strike here. Mr. McFarlane is no dove. He is a very conservative and sober-minded military officer turned civilian, who has become a specialist in national security policy. The job he had has always been a delicate one to fill and has regularly been redefined by those who held it. Some were more and some were less assertive, intrusive, imaginative, self-starting and egomaniacal. McGeorge Bundy, Walt Rostow, Henry Kissinger, Brent Scowcroft, Zbigniew Brzezinski, Richard Allen, William Clark you don't exactly find a pattern there.

Some of these men were more illustrious than Mr. McFarlane, but we can think of none who was more helpful to the president he served. This, we suspect, will be noted as time goes on. By the time Mr. McFarlane took the White House job, a major task awaited: to find a way to turn the fruits of Mr. Reagan's military buildup into actual policy options. He gave over a great deal of time and thought to this. Mr. McFarlane also had some successes as a manager and arbiter of departmental clashes. He has been the kind of public servant who is not fully appreciated until he is no longer around to do the countless quiet, essential tasks that an employer tends to take for granted. He has been that rarest of public officials, a loyal, honorable and unass man who was also intelligent and tough.

A near frantic effort has been mounted by persons close to the White House chief of staff, Donald Regan, to counter stories that his maMcFarlane's decision to leave. Both Mr. McFarlane and the president have dismissed the reports as nonsense. We wish they were nonsense. The muscling and manipulating were egregious, and they did have an effect. Neither Mr. McFarlane's job nor that of Mr.

Regan is subject to Senate confirmation, and a president has the widest possible discretion in choosing the persons be wants for them. Chemistry, as it is called, work habits, style and personal quirk all play a part, and for all we know Mr. Regan may suit Mr. Reagan's needs just fine. But from the outside it sure doesn't look that way. Mr. Regan's ascendancy has been one grating episode after another — George Bush, Margaret Heckler, Robert McFarlane - just as his cabinet years were marked by open combat with others high up in the Reagan government. Mr. Regan is a very ambitious man. He is said to like to be seen in the right places at the right time. The stories are legion. At Geneva he had himself photographed draped over the back of the couch on which Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev were sitting. Mr. McFarlane is just the oppo-site, and you would think that the self-effacing man would have presented no particular challenge or threat to the other. But it seems not to have been regarded by Mr. Regan that way.

Mr. McFarlane's successor is to be his depu-ty, Vice Admiral John Poindexter. That the choice evidently had to be agreeable to Mr. Regan as well as to the president puts a couple of extra bricks in the new fellow's knapsack. But Admiral Poindexter must know, from his time in the White House, how great is the president's need for someone capable of per-forming the crucial balance-wheel function defined and assumed by Mr. McFarlane. At the summit the president put himself in a way to move toward major policy decisions. But he has not yet made those decisions. In the absence of a McFarlane, the internal chemistry of the Reagan administration's policy pro-cess will be different. Let us hope it works.

1910: Crete Appeals to the Powers PARIS - The European Powers have recognized that the basic element of the Cretan population is Greek, by allowing the King of the Hellenes to appoint the Cretan High Commissioner and by making the latter responsible not to Turkey, the suzerain Power, but to the Protecting Powers, Great Britain, France, Russia and Italy. Crete does not even pay tribute to Turkey, and the Cretan militia and gendarmerie are officered not by Turks but by Greeks. Turkish sovereignty is a political fiction, given a semblance of reality by the Christian Powers of Europe. Crete is a living body bound to a corpse. [The Cretan Assembly's] recent appeal to the Christian world is a plea for the right to break and cast away the fetters that bind her. Will the Powers shut their ears?

1935: Business Assails the New Deal NEW YORK - Demanding that American business throw off the yoke of the New Deal, the National Association of Manufacturers has drafted a platform urging the maintenance of Constitutional guarantees, the preservation of freedom of enterprise, the maintenance of sound tax and financial policies by the government, and a search for security through economic progress rather than brain-trust theories. The businessmen, who recently heard their officers and others bitterly attack the New Deal from all angles, received the report [on Dec. 5] of the Resolutions Committee, couched in terms most critical of the Administration. Such terms as tyranny, raw deal and arrogance appeared frequently as speakers urged business to fight further regimentation.

Get on the Side of Certain Change in South Africa

BOSTON — A dispassionate ob-server of South Africa must see one certainty: Real change is coming. When, no one can say, but there is a tum in events, a sense that the abused black majority cannot forever abused clack majority cannot forever be denied its place in political life. That was the meaning when Win-nie Mandela spoke at a funeral for 12 blacks shot by the police in the town-ship of Mamelodi. For 25 years she has been banned, jalled, forbidden to speak in public. Now she felt able to defy that ban — because the government might fear to move against her lest it arouse even more resentment.

It was also the meaning when Eli-jah Barayi, president of the new Con-gress of South African Trade Unions, called for disinvestment by foreign companies and set a six-month deadline for an end to apartheid and white minority rule. Such a bold assertion of union power in politics would have been impossible even a year ago.
All this confronts U.S. policy with an urgent challenge: How does the United States associate itself with the profound movement that is taking place? How does it help change to come in a way that will produce an economically and socially healthy South Alrica, friendly to America?

The most obvious requirement is to identify with the process of change, with the end of racism. That seems so elementary that it should not have to be said. But it does, because U.S. policy over the last five years has alienated the black majority in South Africa to an astounding degree. The Reagan administration's pol-

should and can the U.S. government do in the Philippines?

Economic conditions there are the worst in 40 years. Rebellion is growing rapidly. The acquittal of the 26 defendants accused in the popular feeling that there is no justice under the Marcos regime. The military remains ineffective in incapable of responding well to any of these problems.

icy of "constructive engagement" was designed to wheedle reforms. But blacks saw Pretoria happily accept-ing friendly gestures and making no real political changes. They concludreal pontical changes. They concluded that America was giving the white regime legitimacy. The record is laid out, depressingly, in an article in Foreign Affairs by Sanford J. Ungar and Peter Vale. In a dozen ways, substantive and in courtesies, Washington in recent years has offended South African blacks. Many now refuse even to extend U.S. diplomatic functions attend U.S. diplomatic functions.

Of course the United States must relate to the present government of South Africa—constructively. But it is the simplest common sense that U.S. officials and diplomats should also be relating to the blacks who will play an important part in the future. The Ungar-Vale article makes suggestions on how to overcome the pre-sent deep suspicion of the United States. All involve identifying with what are, after all, American values: democracy, law, free trade unions respect for human rights, education without racial discrimination. To be effective, gestures toward black aspirations have to involve a certain risk. They will have to displease Pretoria. Things "may have to be said or done many times," Mr. Ungar and Mr. Vale say, "before they are believed or credited by disillusioned blacks."

A first step has been taken by the Reagan administration in that direction. Timothy M. Carney, political counselor at the U.S. Embassy, at-port to moderate political organizations is also inadvisable. It cannot be done without corrupting and discrediting them. The best way to help moderate groups is to belp neither them nor Mr. Marcos. Third, a hands-off policy would minimize damage to the bases, foreign investments and friendly relations. By making clear that it is no longer trying to manipulate Philip-pine politics, the U.S. government would enhance its ability to communicate with a variety of groups.

This in turn could lead to good relations with a moderate or left-

The Mamelodi funeral had partic-

That is plain now to many in South Africa, including some restless members of the govern-ment. And it is plain to foreign bank-ers negotiating with Pretoria about its $24 billion in foreign debt: They are not going to agree to rescheduling unless there is meaningful change. America has only limited influence on events, but it can at least put itself clearly on the side of change.

So there was a moral revulsion that happened in both the United States and Britain. I don't see that happening here."

Polarization will accelerate, revolution will widen, pressure will intensify inside the U.S. government to intervene directly and forcefully, and ultimately there will be another "quagmire in Asia" for Americans.

An Entirely New Policy for South Africa

WHAT is needed from the United States is an entirely new and more imaginative approach to South Africa. A policy must be crafted that not only recognizes and works with the current grim realities there, but also tries to only recognizes and works with the current grim readines to stre, but also tries to ease the transition to an altogether different, albeit unknown, future in which blacks will take part in the government of their country. There is no longer any question that this change will occur in South Africa; the question is how according to whose timetable and with what sort of outside involvement.

Only by establishing much more direct communication with the majority and by granting it far greater and more practical assistance can the United States hope to infinence the course of events. In effect, a new, parallel set of diplomatic relationships is necessary. And only by taking further steps that risk hurting the pride of South Africa's current rulers can American leaders hope to win enough credibility among blacks to be listened to in the debate over the country's future—a debate that will have profound consequences in all of Africa, in the United States and in much of the rest of the world. - Sanford J. Full Steam Ahead at a Snail's Pace

By Giles Merritt

BRUSSELS — For Europe this has been the Year of the Snail. The efforts of the main European nations to pull together and reverse their industrial decline by streamlining the European Community have advanced at a snail's pace. On the bright side, though, it does seem that 1986 will not after all turn out to be the Year of the Mule. The threat of stubborn nationalism and paralysis of the EC's political machinery appears to have been lifted.

The Luxembourg summit, attend ed last Monday and Tuesday by heads of government of the present 10 Community members and of imminent newcomers Spain and Portugal, was of key importance in determining Europe's future direction. Had it broken up in the same ill-tempered confusion as the previous sum-mit, in Milan last June, the outlook for Europe would now be grim.

This time the summittees refused to accept the idea of failure. They sweated out a deal in a final 15-hour negotiating session that had them rolling up their sleeves and peering with unaccustomed eyes at the small print. It was a marathon that showed their political commitment to cooperation and EC unity more firmly than any number of resounding speeches.

The package they produced is com-plicated and still incomplete, with a number of loose ends left dangling. It is also modest in its achievem considering that it had been billed as the first overhaul of the Community's legal framework, the 28-year-old Treaty of Rome. Yet for all its shortcomings the Luxembourg pact is prompting sighs of relief.

Failure would have had disastrous consequences. In the short term it would have meant that Spanish and Portuguese accession on Jan. 1 could plunge the Community into adminis-trative chaos. But the summit's deci-sion to introduce much more majority voting in the EC Council of Ministers should aven further stalemates in which a single dissenting member state can hold up decisions affecting the whole Community.

In the medium term, the Luxem bourg package means that the Community can probably meet its timetable for clearing away more than 300 hidden trade barriers so as to create a genuinely common market by 1992. A unified market is crucial to efforts to fight back against U.S. and Japa-nese technological supremacy. Ex-perts in Brussels say abolition of the protectionist devices that still shelter national markets would boost economic activity overnight by lopping 5 to 7 percent off many selling prices and creating four million new jobs. But it is in its long-term implications that the Luxembourg pact is most important. The price of failure this week could easily have been the disintegration of the Community.

Had the leaders thrown up their hands in despair over the unfamiliar would have been a serious political split between those nations that favor greater unity amounting to European federalism, and those who distrust anything beyond a customs union. This divide between the six founding states and all the latecomers can never be fully bridged. France, West Germany, Italy and the Benchux countries will always be the soul of the Community, and the others will never share their idealistic vision of union. But the doubters, notably Britain, made symbolically important concessions at Luxembourg. They accepted that the Community will in future be legally defined as "an area without frontiers" rather than just as an economic marketplace without them, and they agreed that reference to eventual monetary union be written into the Rome treaty.

The sort of haggling that was needed to fine-tune the sammit's 45-page communiqué inevitably frayed tem-pers. President François Mitterrand at one point contempts witterand proached the meeting for degenerat-ing into a "grocer's squabble." And when Chancellor Helmut Kohl backtracked on a pledge to Britain, a se-nior aide to Margaret Thatcher snapped to reporters that "the Germans have never stood firm since Arnhem." Meanwhile, the Italians are still withholding approval of the Luxembourg deal because it does not go far enough toward integration, and the Danes because it goes too far.

These are fringe problems. The do-mestic politics of Denmark and Italy are unlikely to unravel the broad agreement reached in Luxembourg. ... It is true that the agreement is far from a giant step forward, and also — that it does little to address Europe's very pressing difficulties of rising unemployment and waning industrial power. But it contrasts with the Community's earlier setbacks - and with the low point of the Luxembourg talks, when it was glumly remarked that "the snail seems to have turned around and is going backwards." LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Cold War Language

I welcome Norman Davies's cell for us to rid ourselves of misinformation about the Soviet Union. ("Polish Isn't Russian; Russia Isn't America," Nov. 26.) One hopes that the recent summit at Geneva will help us to do that, if nothing else. But Mr. Davies must try harder. The "evil empire" language that President Reagan now. seeks to disown is still too much with us in Mr. Davies's comments.

We might begin by speaking about the Soviet Union, not Russia, as the country over which General Secretary Gorbachev presides.

To call the "greatest reformers in Russian history" also its "greatest tyrants" is not much help. This is the sort of language inflation that only makes matters worse.

To speak of the Soviets as charac-terized by militarism and glorifica-tion of war is an injustice to the many millions among them who want any-thing but war. We cannot afford such generalizations any longer.

Let's keep trying. It is worth the effort, and indeed we dare not give up. Mr. Davies's approach can be aproved, as I hope it will be when his next column appears. LAWRENCE KLIPPENSTEIN.

He is lean and dapper, with slicked-backed hair and a tendency to blush, "On the other hand it's, like a Cinderella dream for them."

"Tango Argentino" was Segovia and Orezzoli's second revue after a long collaboration in theater and opera. Their first was called "Flamenco Puro," and it is not as nervy as it sounds, Orezzoli says, for Argentines to claim that the flamenco they present logy was written by an Argentine. Nor should it seem odd on second, or perhaps on third, thought that Argentines should put on a synthesis of black revue from roughly the 1920s to the '50s and do it a lot better than U.S. products like "Sophisticated Ladies." As such Paris-based Argentines as Alfredo Arias of the TSE theater company have shown, no nation has wider — or more eccentric — cultural references, or a deeper belief in theatrical illusion. Nos-

Song and dance have become so homogenized in the United States, thanks to television and Las Vegas, that when Segovia and Orezzoli went to there at the urging of Jean-Albert Cartier, director of the Théâtre Musical de Paris, who had suggested a black revue, they found many of the artists they auditioned were performing to a dull stereo-type. "Black and Blue" is a mixture of vintage champagne and bathtub gin. Segovia and Orezzoli are proud that the cast has been urged to be themselves.

Some of the performers have begun to feel a kind of pride. You don't need to tell ies to be proud because they are, and with the tango the success was to make them realize that tango is worth preserving. With this show, I was worried about the problems of stereotypes which it is ideologically hard for a foreigner to understand. It is a very simple and traditional show, but we put it together to show the difference between something sterile and something alive."

Sam Shepard's Portrait Of the American Family by Samuel G. Freedman

EW YORK -- Whatever else any great American playwright has done, each one has created, and in turn become identified with, a personal vision of the American family. If anything, the measure of achievement in American drama has been a writer's ability to place a vivid family portrait within a larger, societal frame — or, more to the point, to make the family represent not only the writer's inner life but a set of outer

One thinks of Arthur Miller's men, hus-One thinks of Arthur Miller's men, hus-tlers who lived through one Great Depres-sion and live in fear of another, of Tennessee Williams's women, cut loose with the fall of the plantation aristocracy and thrown into the cruel cities. O'Neill, Odets, Inge, Albee—all conjure images of the family at war with itself.

And in a cycle of family plays stretching over a decade — and culminating with the New York opening of the newest one, "A Lie of the Mind" — Sam Shepard has painted a picture of domestic disharmony as striking as any that preceded it. The wastrel father of "Curse of the Starving Class," the Cain-and-Abel brothers of "True West," the incestu-ous lovers of "Fool for Love" have become indelible characters in the contemporary American theater. So, too, has Shepard staked his claim to the landscapes — both geographical and psychological — of the rootless American Southwest and the beleaguered Middle Western farm belt.

The elements of Shepard's mythology co-alesce again in "A Lie of the Mind." This sprawling play runs more than three hours and follows two families, one in Montana and the other in Southern California, that are bound by the brutal marriage of two children. (The lovers are played by Harvey Keitel and Amanda Plummer; the rest of the cast includes James Gammon, Geraldine Page, Will Patton, Aidan Quinn, Ann Wedgeworth and Karen Young, with music by the Red Clay Ramblers.)

In its vast scope and in several of its themes - possessive and violent love, guilt, escape and lies - "A Lie of the Mind" resembles Shepard's screenplay for "Paris, Texas" more than his recent plays; the film version of one of these, "Fool for Love," opened here this week, directed by Robert Altman and starring Shepard, and a French adaptation of the stage version is running in Paris.

As Don Shewey points out in his recent biography ("Sam Shepard," Dell Books), Shepard's cycle of family plays departed from his earlier work. Shepard lived and wrote amid the East Village's experimental theater movement, and from 1963 through 1976 his plays tended toward the fantastic and his constituted condeases and work. and his creations included cowboys and rock stars, buyon monsters and B-movie gum-shoes. Then, with "Curse of the Starving Class," he began to penetrate his past and work in an increasingly naturalistic vein. Each play since then has peeled back more layers of the playwright's itinerant upbring-ing particularly his relationship with his

"I don't think it's worth doing anything." Shepard said in a recent interview, "unless it's personal. You're not dealing with anything unless you're dealing with the most deeply personal experiences. It's empty otherwise."

E acknowledged the transition in his work since "Curse of the Starving Class." "I thought for years it was boring, uninteresting to write about the family," he said. "I was more interested in this thing of being wild and crazy.

"But the interesting thing about taking real blood relationships is that the more you start to investigate those things as external characters, the more you see they're also internal characters. The mythology has to come out of real life, not the other way around. Mythology wasn't some trick someone invented to move us. It came out of the guts of man. And myths are related on an emotional level. They're not strictly intellectnal programs."

The presence that looms over Shepard's recent work - and, one would surmise, over his life - is that of his father. Samuel Shepard Rogers died in 1983 when he was hit by a car near his home in Santa Fe, New Mexico. His death left forever unresolved the influen tial and often volatile relationship he had with his son. Their torturous bond permeates "A Lie of the Mind" and the film of "Fool for Love.

Shepard has created two fathers in "A Lie of the Mind," each with apparent echoes of Rogers. One lives with his family in Montana but longs to leave, blaming his wife and daughter for running his life. The other father is never seen onstage; he deserted his family, the audience learns, and went to live in a house trailer. Stumbling drunkenly along a highway after a drinking contest with his sou, he was hit by a truck and killed.

In the film of "Fool for Love," the character of The Old Man, father of the lovers Eddie and May, assumes an even greater importance than in the stage version. There The Old Man sat on the side of the stage. sipping whiskey and occasionally speaking. The Old Man of the film is a constant, active presence — a "Twilight Zone" style gremlin or some kind of malevolent puppeter. The film opens with The Old Man plaintively playing harmonica, as if to summon Eddie toward his confrontation with May. The Old Man steals tequila out of Eddie's truck, eavesdrops on Eddie's lights with May, and, until the secret of his two lives is revealed, delights in their destruction.

Shepard's actual "old man" was an even more complicated character. A World War Il flyer (like the offstage father in "A Lie of the Mind"), he attended college on the GI Bill, read Lorca, Neruda and Vallejo, taught high school geography and Spanish and studied at the University of Bogotá on a Fulbright scholarship. He could be a beguiling teacher and storyteller. He was also an alcholic, a father who fought bitterly with his son, a husband who frequently vanished.

"It was hit and miss, always hit and miss," Shepard's sister, Roxanne Rogers, remembers of the relationship between the playwright and his father. "There was always a kind of facing off between them and it was Sam who got the bad end of that. It was Dad who always set up if it was on or off. Dad was a tricky character — because he was a charismatic guy when he wanted to be: warm, loving, kind of a hoot to be around; and the other side was like a snapping turtle. With him and Sam it was that male thing. You put two virile men in a room and they're going to test each other."

big fight with my old man," he recalled in a recent Newsweek interview, "and at that point I fled. And I thought, well, I'm just going to have to start over, pretend I don't even have a family." Rogers remembers that their mother. Jane, was sure S succeed as a writer, but that their father remained skeptical. He saw only one of his son's plays. The occasion typified the pica-resque and pathetic nature of his life.

Once there was a production of 'Buried Child' in Santa Fe," Shepard said, "and my dad took it upon himself to go, and he was rolling drunk and started talking to the characters and stood up and made all this poise. He definitely struck up a relationship with the production. When the audience finally found out he was my old man, everyone stood up and gave him a standing ovation. He was in a state of shock."

S Sheoard became a husband and a A father, as he approached middle age
—he is now 42—he sought reconciliation with his father. Sometimes the effort took the form of writing, like the speech in "Buried Child" in which a teen-age boy, Vincent, tells of looking in the mirror and seeing his face turn into his father's. Sometimes it meant father and son going out drinking together.

"Yeah, we had bouts of drinking," Shep-ard said. He drew breath, paused. "Strange." Again, he was quiet for a moment. "Because would always veer on that thing of accusa-

A Trimmer Sarah Caldwell Returns

by Andrew L. Pincus

OSTON - Sarah Caldwell is healthy and raring to go again — and so, she says, is her Opera Company of Boston.

A year ago, at age 60, the founder, artistic irector, guiding spirit and chief everything the Boston troupe came down with double acumonia. For two weeks nobody knew hether she would come out of the hospital ive. Denied the services of its chief conducor and stage director, the board of directors inceled the entire five-opera season. The -year-old company embarked on what aldwell called "nightmarish times" during hich the house remained dark and a loyal all labored without pay to keep the organition going. It was, she said, "probably the ughest time the company ever had." Now the lights are going up again and aldwell is returning to the pit for the first ne since her recovery, staging and conicting five performances of Humperock's "Hansel and Gretel." Next month e new subscription season begins, offering American premiere of Peter Maxwell ivies's "Taverner" and Janacek's "Makroulos Case" in the original instrumentalk"n, along with Puccini's "Turandot" and erubini's "Médèe." In those works, too, idwell is scheduled to double as conducand director. For 25 years, this has been accustomed role with the company. Caldwell is trim and chipper. Her face, med by iron-gray hair, is unlined. She lks two miles every morning, plays tennis, swims. She has even come down with - and recovered from — tennis elbow.

"I feel marvelous," she said. "I'm enormously fortunate to have a wonderful doctor who not just saved my life but also supervised every phase of the activities that led to my getting stronger and better. I feel better than I've felt in 20 years."

Rejuvenation has also come to the opera company. Postponements of single productions were nothing new in the unpredictable process that puts opera on stage in Boston's old B. F. Keith Memorial, a former vaudeville palace. "Taverner." for instance, had been postponed from the 1983-84 season before being rescheduled again from last year's canceled season. But, alarmed by the loss of a whole season, the board and Caldwell have strengthened the artistic staff and fund-taising apparatus to prevent future blackouts or dependence on a single leader.

Forty new volunteers have come on board. They have gradually relieved the director of many fund-raising chores. Goals have been set and long-range planning is under way. Caldwell has added assistant stage directors to the roster, who, along with "cover" conductors, guarantee that "if I were to develop tennis elbow or tennis knee or tennis brain tomorrow, we'd be in fine shape." With the benefit of sickbed hindsight, Caldwell agreed that she had let the company, like herself, get run down. Fund-raising and guest-conducting, both of which she finally had to cut back on, had drained her. "Very stupidly," she said, "I tried to do all kinds of things, and I tried to do too many things at once, and so I got fatter and sicker and duller and less effective. And in a sense the sickness was a blessing in disguise because it gave me a chance to reassess what I was doing that was so stupid and the places where I needed help."

Segovia and Orezzoli's visual inspiration

HE new season is one production smaller than usual. "The Makropoulos Case" and "Taverner" are car-ryovers from last year, and Caldwell had done extensive preparation abroad for both. For Janacek's penultimate opera she went to Czechoslovakia, particularly the Janacek library and museum in Brno, for copies of the manuscript and original score and parts.

She said that, like "Boris Godanov" in Mussorgsky's original version, Janacek's opera is more difficult in the original instrumentation, but that the sounds are "distinctive and characteristic and very special."

For Maxwell Davies's dramatization of the life of the 16th-century English composer John Taverner, Caldwell visited the composer - she calls him "a nifty friend" - at his home in the Orkney Islands to plan the production. He will also come to Boston to take a hand in the staging.

"Turandot," the opening production, will star Eva Marton in the title role and the Hungarian tenor Janos Nagy as Calaf. The Central Opera Theater of Beijing created the costumes at Caldwell's request, made while she was conducting the group in 1981, and members of a Boston King Fu academy will perform original choreography.

"Médée," to be sung in French, will close the season in June. Shirley Verrett will be the heroine — her first time in the role.

Caldwell has scheduled the U.S. premiere of Olivier Messiaen's "St. Francis of Assisi" for 1987. She plans Leonard Bernstein's "Candide" for next fall and has obtained the rights to the Bernstein opera "A Quiet Place," which she expects to do in a 1987 double bill with its companion piece, "Trouble in Tahiti."

The losses from cancellation of the season came to $812,000, according to the company president, Laszlo J. Bonis. He said that, with the stepped-up fund raising, which he called "encouraging" to date, the company hopes to reduce its deficit to $500,000 by June and eliminate it by June 1987.

Caldwell is boundlessly grateful to her board, staff, family and friends, who, she said, "have walked many a mile with me to make sure that Sarah didn't backslide" into her pre-600-calorie-a-day ways. Similarly, she said, subscribers have responded sympathetically to a plea that they turn their 1984-85 payments into donations and resubscribe.

"I've lost quite a bit of weight but I've got a lot more to lose," she observed with a chuckle and a trace of a Missouri drawl. "And the company has gained a certain amount of weight but has a lot more to

by James M. Markham

HE words are spoken in the Sierra de Guadarrama, the small mountain range that rises from the sunbleached meseta that Madrid sits upon, before Robert Jordan blows up the bridge in "For Whom the Bell Tolls." It must have been wild country during the Spanish ingway would probably be dismayed by the sprawl of suburban housing developments and weekend A-frames that has crept into the evergreen oaks and pines of the Guadar-rama; he might find the funny little ski resorts at Navacerrada another taming touch

Yet if he left the good roads and set off into the woods, he would still be able to encounter the wildernesses (though not the utterly fictional caves) where Robert Jordan. Maria, Anselmo, Fernando and the woman of Pablo played out their destinies. The Alpine Club, where Jordan rested for three hours, is still there; so is the bridge - though it is stone, not "a steel bridge of a single span." In a letter, Hemingway once called Spain "the last good country left." His Spain in fact and fiction, is still a wonderful-

I lived in Madrid for six of the best years of my life. As a man writing in English for a living, I found my footsteps dogged by the giant presence of this writer who had done so much to fix Spain in the contemporary imagination. He wrote things that one was tempted to steal, or pilfer from around the edges, like this from "Death in the Afternoon" about a capital city that is perched at mountain climate. It has the high cloudless Spanish sky that makes the Italian sky seem sentimental and it has air that is actively oleasurable to breathe."

One could not get around him, or even avoid some of the carnage he'd left behind. Hemingway drank and ate in as many places as George Washington slept in. By impaling Botin in the last pages of "The Sun Also Rises" with these words — "It is one of the best restaurants in the world" - he guaranteed this rustic spot off the Plaza Mayor an eternal clientele of American tourists and Spanish businessmen impressing their American contacts. There is nothing wrong with a restaurant patronized by American tourists, but if they are the only customers you might as well be eating your roast suckling pig in Boston.
Another Hemingway haunt in Madrid, the Cervecería Alemana on the Plaza Santa Ana - a square where old men play chess with giant white and black pieces—retains its wooden facade, its blackened oil paintings and yellowing photographs of builfight scenes, which hint at its dwindling matador clientele. I know a number of American and English men, working at the fringes of journalism and literature, who systematically de-stroyed their livers by sitting for years at its sturdy tables downing Fundador brandles and talking Hemingway-tough about buils and women. I do not say that they would not have destroyed their livers without Papa Hemingway's inspiration, but it seems to me that his ghost was a spiritual accessory to their self-inflicted wounds.

Never having developed a hankering for Fundador brandy in such a hot clime, I slipped relatively unscathed out of Hemingway's Madrid in 1982 to the more subtle enticements of Bonn. But, though one can leave Spain, Spain is not a country that leaves you. Hemingway's Spain is not the tourist Spain of the coasts and beaches, but of the interior. In this heartland he encountered, and reinvented in literature, a tragic Spain of impassioned living and violent dying a nation of Goyas and Garcia Lorcas that seemed cast to his own virile, existentialist morality. The epicenter of this universe, to which I returned this summer, is Pamplona and the surrounding hills of Navarre during the festival of San Fermin.

I had been to the legendary sanfermines once before, in 1977, when Spain was in the midst of its momentous transition to democracy. It was an amusing but tense festival because the emergent partisans of Basque nationalism were constantly clashing in Pamplona's streets with the police. Showing the red, white and green ikurrunia, the Basque flag, could get one clobbered on the head by the cops; it was certainly as dangerous as running with the bulls.

All that has changed. Next to the Irona
Bar on the Plaza del Castillo, where Jake Barnes and his friends besotted themselves, the ikurrania hangs harmlessly on the head-quarters of the Basque Nationalist Party. A kind of political normalcy reigns.

A bust of Hemingway was put up by the town fathers of Pamplona in 1968 next to the Plaza de Toros on a small pedestrian way that bears the American's name; the brave and the foolbardy who make the three-minute morning sprint in front of the bulls dash past it as they spill into the ring, if they have not already stumbled in a human traffic pileup or been gored.

Ernesto, as many Spaniards call him, both out of fondness and an inability to pronounce his surname, came to regret in some measure the success with which he had spread the raucous sanfermines. In "The Dangerous Summer," describing his 1959 bullfight tour across Spain, Hemingway denounces the intrusion of the modern world on his beloved fiesta: "Tve written Pamplona once and for keeps. It is all there as it always was except forty thousand tourists have been added."

OR a while, many natives concurred.

"There is a debate over whether or not Hemingway was positive for the identity of the sanfermines," said Julian Balduz, the city's mayor. "What happened is that Hemingway at the safety is that the same of the sanfermines." Hemingway put the sanfermines at the dispo-sition of the whole world, and the whole world doesn't fit into Pamplona." Yet the number of foreign tourists has dropped off in recent years; the eight days of merrymaking and bullfights are dominated by native Spaniards in their uniforms of white pants, white shirts, red sashes and red scarves and rope-soled shoes. (This time I decked myself out in this gear and, to my surprise, felt quite at ease. The wine helped, too.)

A hard core of perhaps 200 Americans and Englishmen returns annually to Pamplona. One of their leaders is Matt Carney, a model from Paris who achieved momentary notoriety by insulting Hemingway during his 1959 manifestation in Pamplona; another is Jeff Garth, a TWA steward, who was gored this season. American college students, with their well-thumbed paperback copies of "The Sun Also Rises," seem to check in for the opening days, then drift south to the Costa del Soi or east to the Costa Brava. But even these seem to be thinning out.

"There are fewer groupies and fringe peo-ple," said Allen Josephs, a professor from the University of West Florida who is writing a book on Hemingway and Spain. "Some people have complained that Hemingway uined Pamplona and the sanfermines. That's nonsense. It's still an entirely Basque festival and a Spanish festival." Carlos Barrena, an eminent builfight critic from Bilbao who has been going to the sanfermines for 27 years, concurs: "It is more comfortable for us now than it was during the Hemingway hoom years."

The festival has two ingredients; wine and bulls. The Basques are good drinkers, which is a mercy in such an alcoholic event. Womger of being pinched or menaced. The rhythm of the day is set by early rising, or no to be the gardens behind the cathedral.

The Irate River, where Hemingway and his characters fished, near Arive.

— is Marceliano's down behind the ayunta miento, or city hall, "where we went in the morning to eat and drink and sing after the encierro; Marceliano's where the wood of the tables and the stairs is as clean as the teak decks of a yacht except that the tables are honorably wine-spilled. The wine was as good as when you were twenty-one, and the food as marvelous as always." I had a blue trout and a green salad and talked to three gnarled men from San Sebastian about the

In Spanish, you don't go to a builfight, you go to the bulls, a los toros. The expression hints at the centrality of this mysterious animal. As Hemingway found, Spaniards are perplexed to come across an American who interested in the bulls, or who knows a little bit about them: It is as if the American has crashed some secret society.

The toreros, or bullfighters, go to Pamplo-na because it has the second biggest plaza de toros after Madrid, which means they get paid well. But they don't like the unserious, drunken spectators who prance and cavort on the low-price, sunny side - raining cush-ions and hunks of bread down onto the picador when displeased — and they don't like the big buils that traditionally come to

The literature on bullfighting often seems nothing but a series of laments for a golden age that, when it existed, was being lamented for not being as good as the one before it. Hemingway falls a bit into this mode in "The Dangerous Summer." It is satisfying to be able to report that in Spain today a consensus among alicionados is building that both bulls and toreros are rising out of the deca-dence to which they had been condemned. The corrida has been embraced anew by many who at the time of Franco's death in 1975 spurned it as a legacy of a dark, retrograde, anti-European Spain; the same is true of flamenco. Having become a stable European democracy, Spain may now have redis-covered the pleasures of being itself.

In "The Sun Also Rises" the beautiful foothills of the Pyrenees are - with the quasi-religious experience of the builfight the moral counterpoint to the debauchery of Jake's lost-generation friends. So it is necessary, and uplifting, to leave wine-soaked Pampiona for a one-hour drive to the village of Burguete, which sits at 2,982 feet (910 meters), and to the Irati River, where Jake and Bill do some heavy male bonding and catch trout.

In his fiction, Hemingway is not always a reliable guide to geography and place, which he shunts about for higher literary purposes. He makes us believe, for example, that one can see the monastery of Roncesvalles from Burguete; it is not possible to do so, but the linkage heightens the religious overtones of Jake and Bill's quest.

Even Allen Josephs, with all his research. has not been able to figure out exactly where Jake, or Hemingway, fished the Irati, a pretty, shallow, swift-moving river that winds through green hills where you can walk for hours without seeing another human being. On his return to the footbills in 1959, Hemingway found them as unspoiled as they are now, and drove "further up that lovely trout stream into the great virgin forest of the Irati that was unchanged since the time of the

He declined to give details of his move-ments or his secret trout spot, "because we want to go back there again and not find fifty cars or jeeps have found it." He never made it back.

At the Bar Zubiondo, which is next to a rickety bridge over the Irati in the hamlet of Arive, I made some inquiries about the famous American writer, but the proprietor, pumping a case solo. confessed: "The Irati is very long, so I don't know where it would have been." She had only dimly heard of Hemingway: The Irati had triumphed even

Somewhere above Arive, I plunged into the underbrush and had a picnic of bread, rosado wine, plums, pears and peaches on a little stone beach by the river. I didn't catch any trout, or even try, but I think I saw one

State-of-the-Art Travel: Paying Attention to Detail

by Roger Collis

NE of the world's leading strategic planners. Dr. Michael Kami, is fond of saying that the essence of successful corporate planning is to expect the unexpected." The same applies to business travel. The most carefully crafted itinerary can come irrevocably unghed if you're kept waiting for three days for an official meeting in Africa or the Middle East. Snow can strike in Marseille, leading to a cascade of broken appointments. (Would you believe Lisbon airport being closed for 36 hours because of high winds?) Or maybe the restaurant where you'd planned to host a power lunch is closed that one crucial day. State-of-the-art travel means checking out the options not only before you go, but What if?" scenarios once you're on the road. The savvy traveler minimizes hassle ad expense by having alternative reservaagain expense by having alternative reserva-tions, avoiding back-to-back meetings on a faith-destination trip and allowing a day or two as a buffer for rest or rescheduling, especially before vital appointments in a new time zone as well as boaing up on local lore. It's thorough preparation, staying flexi-ble and paying attention to detail that count.

Here's the second part of a checklist (the first part ran last week) to guide you through the jungle of options. It is by no means exhaustive, but it may help you to refine your own business-travel strategy.

• Keep trips short and travel light. Some in all miles

puncits believe that two weeks is long enough for any trip; when you're away a third week, your efficiency falls off (especialby when crossing several time zones — you feel jet lag more flying east, but going west you're tempted to wear yourself out by ex-tending your working day) and schedule-changing can be a logistical nightmare. Restrict yourself to carry-on luggage whenever possible. You shouldn't need more than two suits, a jacket that serves as a biazer, half a dozen shirts and maybe a spare pair of shoes. Most women executives can travel just as light. Dramatic jewelry and a selection of blouses and sweaters means you can dress the same skirt up or down for nearly allbusiness occasions.

Carry-on luggage is becoming a contentious issue but there are no hard rules. You can get away on most airlines with two pieces measuring up to 22x19x6 inches (about 56x48x15 centimeters). If you do have to check baggage, never consign vital papers to the risk of loss or misrouting. Remember that excess baggage rates are outrageous — each excess kilogram (2.2 pounds) costs I percent of the first-class fare. A solution at Heathrow and Gatwick is the London Baggage Company, which can save you up to 75 percent. Charges include collection within central London and delivery at the destination airport.

 Consider the Schiphol connection. If you're flying long haul from a European city you can usually save money by buying a one-way ticket to Amsterdam (or an APEX/PEX or a British Caledonian "Time Flyer" fare) and then a return ticket from there which you can use to return direct to your home airport. Unlike fares from most cities, those from the Netherlands (on KLM and other airlines) are fully flexible, allowing unlimited stopovers, rerouting and change of carrier. The best bargains are in first and business class on routes to North America and the Far East. Flying from Amsterdam to Sydney can be $800 less than from London. From Amsterdam to New York costs little more in first class than the business-class fare from London. (First-class fares are normally twice those in husiness class.) In Amsterdam you ean buy a round-trip Air France Concorde ticket to New York (via Paris) for almost half the price charged by British Airways in London. An added bonus at Schiphol is the abundance of connections, the famous dutyfree shops and an average connecting time of · Watch for the Brussels connection. A British-Belgian air traffic agreement signed on Oct. 10 is the most liberal yet established within Europe. It opens the way to radical experiments in fares and services between the two countries. British and Belgian airlines will be free to operate whatever services and fares and at whatever frequency they wish, subject only to disapproval by both governments. British Caledonian has already announced a winter round-trip "Time Flyer fare of £55 ($81) starting in December, between Gatwick and Brussels. This compares with the normal economy fare of £162. It is available only on off-peak flights, but it has none of the Saturday night stay and advance booking restrictions of APEX. A seminal feature of the agreement is that airlines can combine services to more than other European countries.

Round-the-world fares, If you are traveling around the world in either direction consider a RTW ticket, which can save you up to 40 percent on the full economy or even business-class fare. Starting in Europe, a one point in either country and to points in

Fallback plans are necessary sooner or later typical routing might take you to the Middle East and on to the Far East. You could then go on to North America via the North or South Pacific. There are dozens of prices and options for RTW as well as restrictions re-garding advance booking and number of stopovers, but it's well worth checking with your travel agent.

• Clubs and lounges. Use of an executive lounge comes with a business-class ticket when you fly some airlines (such as SAS, with 18 lounges around the world), with others, such as British Airways, you have to pay a membership fee. The International Airline Passengers Association has lounges at Schiphol, Tegel (Berlin) and Frumicino (Rome). The Heathrow Business Centre (Terminal 2) provides a fully equipped office. (Terminal 2) provides a fully equipped office and staff for basic dues of £50 a year.

 The duty free bazaar. This is a bargain or a rip-off depending on where you shop and what you buy. The best values are in shops that are tax free as well as duty free. A shop with limited space tends to carry only top of the line items. Best buys are usually items local to a country. For variety, Hong Kong, Kusla Lumpur and Singapore are hard to beat. A recent innovation is the arrival shop where you can buy goods enter-ing a country. In Europe, Schiphol has the best reputation for variety and prices, but the new duty free shop at Gatwick is worth a look. Last July, prices at Copenhagen's Kastrup Airport were cut on some items to compete more effectively with Schiphol. . · Car rentals. A spot check at Heathrow revealed that to rent a car at the airport costs 50 percent more than for the same vehicle at a downtown location. Some firms, for exam ple Swan National at Heathrow (associated with Interrent) offer cars at advantageous prices from airports at off-airport rates. Many rental companies, especially the majors, are providing a "business service," in-cluding phones in the higher priced cars and discounts at some hotels. Car rental is so competitive that you should be able to negotiate a discount of at least 20 to 30 percent.

Food, History and an Art Deco Revival

ARIS — Overnight, the word went out "Manger an Boeuf" became the slogan of the hour and from the moment the newly reconstructed Bornf sur le Toit opened its doors in late October, this huge and historic Art Deco brasserie has been home to 500 to 700 diners

Even more remarkable, Jenn-Paul Bucher currently turns down 500 reservations daily, and the popularity means that reservations must be made at least three days in advance. In Paris? In a city with such an astonishing wealth of grand old brasseries? Even Bucher - the director of the enormously successful group of restored brasseries that comprises Flo, Julien, Vaudeville and Terminus Nord -is sort of twittering with relieved content-into the wee hours? At the new Boeuf, all is as it should be. ment over the success of this monument to Art Deco architecture and the lifestyle it Clearly, Bucher is a man in touch with the times. For the taste of the Parisian of the 1980s is not all that different from the Parisian of the 1920s, when Le Boeul sur le Toit (named after the American jazz bar in the 1920 ballet of the same name by Jean Coctean and Darius Milhaud) was home to Picasso, Coco Chanel, Maurice Chevalier and the pianist Jean Wiener.

Now, as then, people go out looking for a good time, not simply gastronomic revela-tion. They want to eat well, yes, but the surroundings, the ambience, the total experience are what count in the end.

Bucher says it himself — he is selling a bit of history. And he is in the right market. Who in Paris does not want to feel, emotionally at least, part of those magic Art Deco days, when the creative class gathered at night near the piano to celebrate in public

From the moment you approach the en-trance on Rue du Colisée you know exactly what to expect. There will be no surprises and there will be a fête. Mountains of shellfish - oysters, sea urchins, clams and mussels — sparkle with gemlike clarity on glis-tening beds of crushed ice. Inside, the sheer volume and presence of the space is instantly exciting visually overwhelming. You feel, for certain, you're in the right place.

HE piano bar, peach-toned walls, posters, potted ferns and massive Art Deco chandeliers set the tone, as do the hip and happy looking diners, sharing those plateaux de fruits de mer and sampling classic brasserie fare, such as salade frisée; berring and warm sliced potatoes in a tangy vinaigrene; cassoulet, and roast leg of lamb with tender green flageolet beans.

The food and the service are really about as good as a diner can expect from a space this large and at a price this affordable. At Bocuf sur le Toit, a 200-franc note easily takes care of the bill.

Bucher's secret is really a combination of tional French respect for gastronomy, His brasseries and charcuteries share a central kitchen that handles desserts and some of the other common food preparation. But high standards for fresh ingredients and a well-trained staff keep his restaurants from becoming mundane food factories.

And though this is the first Bucher restaurant that is a total architectural recreation, not a simple renovation, it hasn't seemed to bother diners in the least. He could, he knows, export the theme to the United States tomorrow, but without service personnel and a guaranteed full house at lunch, the Bucher formula would soon lose its magic.

Still, like many Frenchmen, Bucher dreams of America. But for now, he is content knowing that the Parisian appetite for the solid, medium-priced brasserie that tosses in a touch of nostalgia is far from

Clowning Around With Serious Eating

by Katherine Knorr

ARIS - We all know that France is the land where food is not only delicious but beautiful, with much care lavished on composing an atlat, on decorating pates and cakes. But the latest book from a group of France's wilder cartoonists shows that France is also the land where food is, well, weird.

The latest offering from HAI (for Humorstes Associes), "La Table," is for anyone who takes food seriously, or rather not serionsiv at all.

In the eyes of this motley crew, food is all sorts of things: surrealistic, frightening, grotesque, erotic. It's not particularly appetizing, and it's not for children.

Diners indulge while a dozen frogs roll around in wheelchairs—yes, they lost their legs. Giant mice on some other planet rush up with forks to eat the cosmonaut caught in a giant mousetrap. A huge and confused scene with dozens of cooks in a restaurant kitchen is interrupted by a delivery boy bringing their lunch: takeout hamburgers. A man opens a can labeled Russian sardines only to find each time a slightly smaller can to open — like Russian dolls.

"La Table" is an obvious companion to an earlier book, "Le Vin." One of the favorite themes of the carroonists there was, not surprisingly, corks and the devices used to pry them out of bottles. Corkscrews some-how get stuck upside down in bottles like ships in bottles. A contraption modeled on the Swiss Army knife is a seven-pronged corkscrew with a French flag. A pirate missing a hand has not a hook but — yes, a corkscrew. There is, of course, a drunk Mona Lisa, and a highly decorated military man whose honors are French wines. And the inevitable French cops with the inevitable breath analysis tests — but with some rather

The HA! cartoonists contribute to a number of France's magazines and newspapers —from the staid France-Soir magazine and Le Monde to the raunchy-but-hilarious Hara Kiri - as well as to such publications as Playboy and Penthouse. They also publish their own books of cartoon strips and illustrate other books. They formed the group HA! in 1980 with the intention of producing a book every year. In between "Le Vin" — which had a German and a Dutch edition — and "La Table," came "Le Ski" and "Les 7 Pachia Caritone". Peches Capitaux."

London's Dickensian Holiday Season

by Jo Thomas

ONDON - If there is a time when a visitor can sense Jolly Old England in his sprawling capital, part ancient and part still growing up, it's in December and January, when the nights are long and florists put pots of violets in their shop windows and the holiday lights have been strung since early November.

The English celebrate the holidays with Dickensian zest and amazing staying power: Christmas trees in homes are decorated by the second week in December and stay up until Twelfth Night (Jan. 6), long after the last of the chocolates with which they are aden have been unwrapped and eaten. Bear in mind, though, that museums and most restaurants close Dec. 24 to 26 and on Jan. 1 and theaters take a break on Christmas.

The Norwegian ambassador, Rolf T. Busch, switches on the lights of the gigantic Christmas tree on Trafalgar Suare on Dec. 12, and carols are sung around it from 4 to 9 each night until Christmas Eve. The lights stay on until Jan. 6.

The return of Halley's Comet has prompted exhibitions at two popular London at-tractions, the British Museum and the London Planetarium. The British Museum displays the recently discovered Babylonian observations of the comet's visits in the years 164 and 87 B.C., as well as other sightings made before Edmund Halley predicted it would return in 1758. The Planetarium, noting that the real comet will be small and faint compared to past visits, is showing it close up in perfect skies in its "Once in a Lifetime" show every 40 minutes from 12:15 to 4:20 P.M. and from 11 A.M. on weekends and holidays. It will be closed on Christmas but resumes Dec. 26. Admission is the equivalent

The British Museum also has, until Jan. 5. the most comprehesive exhibition on Buddhism ever staged in Britain, including early manuscripts, sculpture and painting (Daily, 10 to 5; Sunday, 2:30 to 6; free.) At the Barbican Center, a festival of traditional Japanese culture is under way through Jan. 26. The exhibit, "Toki — Tradition in Japan Today," centers around the paintings of 50 of Japan's leading Nihonga artists, who use traditional Japanese techniques while reflecting Western influences. A traditional Japanese garden and tea house will also be displayed, along with jewelry and other exhibitions. From Jan. 13 it will also include a retrospective of the Japanese film director Akira Kurosawa. (Daily, 10 to 7:15; Sunday, noon to 7:15; admission free, except for Nihonga exhibit, which is $2.80, and the films, from $2.)

"German Art in the 20th Century", is at the Royal Academy until Dec. 22 (admission: $4.50). From Jan. 16 through March 31, the Academy will present the first major exhibition on World War I, including the engine from the Fokker triplane that Baron Manfred von Richtholen was flying when he was shot down, and a ventriloquist's dummy used to amuse troops in the trenches. (Daily, 10 to 5:50; Sunday, 2 to 5:50; suggested donation: $1.40.)

LSO under the museum's jurisdiction are the Cabinet War Rooms, the underground emergency offices of Winston Churchill, his cabinet and chiefs of staff, in the Government Offices on Great George Street. To find the entrance, go to the Clive Steps on King Charles Street. (Tuesday through Saturday from 10 to 5:50; $2.80.)

The Victoria and Albert Museum has three exhibits focusing on fashion: a collection of photographs chosen by David Bailey, the fashion photographer, until Jan. 19; hats from India, until Jan. 26; and historic and contemporary knitting. The London Festival Ballet opens The Nutcracker" Dec. 26 at Royal Festival Hall, and it will run through Jan. 15. ($5 to $17.50). Peter Wright's production of this magical story will be performed by the Royal Ballet at Covent Garden from Dec. 14 to Jan. 8 ($6 to $30). Wright also has a new production of "Giselle" at Covent Garden, running until Jan. 17. His "Coppelia" will be at Sadler's Wells from Jan. 3.

The English National Opera has a new production of Mozart's "Don Giovanni," directed by Jonathan Miller, at the Coliseum until mid-January ($5,50 to $24.50). To mark the Handel tercentenary, the company is also presenting his "Julius Caesar" from Dec. 16 to Jan. 15 ($5.60 to $24.50). At Covent Garden, the Royal Opera, with Placido Domingo, will begin Verdi's "Simon Boccanegra" on Jan. 14 ($10 to $52).

Two delightful Covent Garden restaurants with French cuisine are within easy reach of both the theater district and some of the best shopping this season. Inigo Jones, 14 Garrick Street (836-6456), offers nouvelle cuisine in a former stained-glass factory. The service manages to be both friendly and unobtrusive. While prices for dinner are from $24.50 a person, a three-course lunch or pre-theater dinner are available for $21. Among the offerings are a salad of thinly sliced eggplant and zucchini with mint vogurt, a ragout of hare with red wine, prunes and vegetables, and a fresh sorbet for dessert, (Closed Sundays and Dec. 24 to Jan. 1.) At Thomas de Quincey's, 36 Tavistock Street (240-3972), the menu at hunch includes a red pepper mousse with avocados and a main course of filet of pork thinly sliced and shallow fried with slices of pears served in layers of puff pastry and a wild mushroom sauce. A recent lunch for two, with drinks and wine, cost $86. (Closed Sundays and and it had to do with me."

Yet Shepard is more elegiac than angry when he talks about his father's death. "It hasn't really clarified anything," he said.
"Nothing's clearer to me. You spend a lot of time trying to piece these things together and it still doesn't make any sense. His death brought this whole thing to a head, this yearning for some kind of a resolution which could never be. But at the same time, it was well worth the journey, trying to make some kind of effort to re-establish things."

· Death and time also have given Shepard some perspective, as a person and as a writer,

"When you're younger, that rage is com-pletely misunderstood," he said. "It seems personal when you're a kid. This rage has to do with you somehow. Then as you get older you see that it had nothing whatsoever to do with you. It had to do with a condition this man had to carry because of the circum-stances of his life, those being World War II. the Depression, the poverty of the Midwest farm family. And all these things contributed to this kind of malaise. Then it becomes much more interesting, when you have some distance on it, because then you can see here was a man who happened to be my father and yet he was more than just that."

One consequence of the unbulent Rogers household, and of Rogers's death, was that it made his children hunger for family. "I think it gave us a concrete perspective of what we had as a family, that it wouldn't be around forever," Roxanne Rogers said. "We've always been spread around and kind of carefree in our relations. What happened is we decided to try to put this family back togeth-

Rogers is working as assistant director of A Lie of the Mind," The other daughter in the family, Sandy, wrote and performed eight songs for the "Fool for Love" soundtrack. Shepard and his companion, the actress Jessica Lange, live in Santa Fe and are expecting a child soon. Before that he headed an extended family on a northern California ranch with his first wife, O-Lan Johnson.

"Sam's always needed a family." Roxanne Rogers said. "He's always needed a base, even though it hasn't always taken the most traditional form."

"A Lie of the Mind" has brought Shepard back to New York, his first home away from his family and the scene of his early triumphs. Here he formed part of a downtown theatrical community that included the playwright Lanford Wilson and the producer Ellen Stewart. But for a man who disdains tion. It would always turn, inevitably, on this iffe east of the Mississippi, and cities in accusation that there was something wrong particular. New York stirs little sentimentality. He likened the city to "a kennel" and, asked how he coped with the congestion, said, "I got a .38. That's my escape hatch."

As for his memories of the downtown days, Shepard said: "For the most part, it was a kind of survival act. I wouldn't go through it again if I had a choice. When I came here I was 18 and I didn't know anything about New York. I had no idea what it was like except it was some kind of cultural center. At the time I didn't realize I was a kid. I thought - well. I don't know what I thought. And now, looking back, I see I was pretty much of a kid, running around in an overcoat. But there is a mixture of feelings. There's a sense of this is where it all started. where I started writing, in this town. So there's a nostalgia. But I don't miss the city,

More than 20 years after he first arrived in New York, Shepard also faces vastly different expectations. No longer is he just another aspiring writer, holed up in the East Village; no longer is he even the Off Off Broadway hero whose name meant little up-town and even less west of the Hudson. Now he is a movie star, gossip column fodder, and arguably the finest American playwight of his generation.

The surroundings have changed more than the man. Shepard sits for an interview wearing cowboy boots, jeans, a flaunel shirt and a thermal vest. His conversation grows most animated not on the subject of writing but of music. He speaks knowingly of Lightnin' Hopkins and Roscoe Holcombe, two favorites; he is up to date on "Don't Mess. With My Toot-toot," the surprise hit from Cajun country. And it sounds genuine when professes not to feel the pressure to top, or at least equal, himself. "I don't think it's possible to second-guess the reaction to your work," he said. "You just can't get involved in it. If you do get involved in it, then you try to predetermine things or calculate things. And I don't think you can work that way. It just doesn't seem possible. My work has always come out almost like a miracle, some kind of strange accident. You stumble into a certain territory that starts to excite you in a way that's got to be manifested. It comes out as a play or a character. But that kind of work cannot be formulated by 'My next project is this' or They're expecting me to do this.' Then it gets shot to hell, because then it becomes a career. I'm not interested in a career. I don't want to have a career. I want to do the work that fascinates me."

British Designer Fashioning a Larger Habitat

By Steve Lohr

New York Times Service. LONDON - Sir Terence Conran, one of Britain's great entrepreneurial success sto-ries, is about to enlarge his retail and design empire, and the question now is whether he can continue to work his magic. Sir Terence's company, Habitat Mothercare PLC, which owns more than 750 stores, including the Conran's home furnishings chain in the United States, amounced Nov. 25 that it was merging with British Home Stores PLC, a department store and food retailer. The transaction is worth $2.12 bil-

Although the merger is a combination of approximate equals and the board will be divided evenly between the managements of the two concerns, Sir Terence will be chair-man and chief executive of the new, as yet unnamed, enterprise.

Under the guidance of Sir Terence, Habitat Mothercare has earned a reputation for being dynamic, fashionable and fast-growing, and many think his touch will prove useful for BHS. Terence Couran can do a great deal retail chain selling merchandise for young mothers, babies and children, which he acquired three years ago. It was, he recalled, a solid, well-run company whose products and stores lacked pizzazz. "BHS is something of the same thing," Sir Terence said. "It is a very good, very decent, very straightforward company, but its prod-ucts are dull. There is a great deal of opportu-nity to bring style and design to BHS,"

Sir Terence, who was knighted two years ago for his contributions to British design and retailing, would seem to be the right man for the job. Trained as a textile and furniture designer, he began his retailing career in 1964 with Habitat, a cash-and-carry home furnishings store in London geared to young people.

The goods were modern, trendy and af-fordable. He began just as the postwar baby boom generation was striking out on its own, setting up households and eager for the kinds of products Sir Terence was offering. The

Dow Tests 1,500 and Retreats

IP.M.

NEW YORK — The New York Stock Exchange tested the 1,500 level Thursday but finished mixed in the fourth heaviest trading session in history. On the Big Board, 181.01 million shares changed hands in the most active session since Oct. 19, 1984.

The Dow Jones industrial average broke through the 1,500 level in an early afternoon surge, crossing a centennial mark for the second time in a month. The Dow passed the 1,400 level on Nov. 6.

However, late selling caused the Dow to close with a modest loss of 1.49, to 1,482.91, down from its record, set Wednesday, of 1,484.40.

Analysts said a tug-of-war between computerized buying programs pushing the market up, and profit-taking pulling it back, characterized the session.

Other indicators also fell, The NYSE composite index eased 0.13 to 117.57. Standard & posite index eased 0.13 to 117.57. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index fell 0.35 to 203.88 and the price of an average share declined 4 cents. The lead of advancing issues over decliners was wide at midday, but narrowed late in the session. Advances finally outpaced declining issues 867-787 among the 2,056 issues traded. After the market closed, the Federal Reserve reported that the nation's basic money supply cose $4.4 billion in the week ended Nov. 25. Edward Nicoski of the Minneapolis-based firm of Piper Jaffrey & Hopwood said a Dow close above 1,500 would not have the major significance that it might once have enjoyed. Brazil to Repay 25% Of Failed Banks' Debt BRASILIA — Brazil has announced that it would reimburse ity for all of the losses suffered by round 25 percent of the losses sufered by foreign banks when three private Brazilian banks failed Nov. 19. The payment will come to about $100 million.

The National Economic Council made the decision Wednesday, two veeks after the central bank closed he large Comind and Auxiliarbanks and the smaller Maisonnave

The decision calls for approxi-mately $100 million in monetary reserves to be drawn to reimburse international creditors who lent an estimated $415 million to the three banks. Together, the three had un-covered loans of $764 million. Local creditors also will be rein bursed for 25 percent of their losses, the council said. Payments to all creditors will begin Dec. 16. Financial sources said about 150 U.S. banks and some Japanese and European lenders had faced losses in what are known as "Resolution 53" loans.

These are sums lent by interna-tional creditors to Brazilian banks, which then re-lend the money locally. The loans do not carry a soverment guarantee but the add-id risk normally is compensated by higher interest rates. Initially, Finance Minister Dil-

Hanson Reports Pretax Profit Up 49.5% on Year

LONDON - Hanson Trust PLC reported Thursday that its pretax profit in the year ended Sept. 30 had risen 49.5 percent from the previous year, to £252.8 million ($375.4 million). The group also announced a one-for-three bonus issue.

Hanson's sales rose to £2.67 billion from £2.38 billion a year earlier, and its profit, up from £169.1 million, was above many analysts expectations.

But shares of the group, whose £520-million rights issue earlier this year attracted limited stockholder support, showed little change. Hanson shares traded Thursday at 209 pence each on the London Stock Exchange, up from 207 pence at Wednesday's close.

Gordon White, chairman of Hanson Industries Inc., said Hanson was looking at other opportunities in the United States while it awaited an appeals court's decision on its offer for SCM Corp.

Ferranti was one of the few British electronics companies expected to show any increase in profits this year, but its first-half performance was below analysts' best expectations. U.K., Japan Seek Phone Business in Third World

LONDON - The national telephone companies of Britain and Japan are starting campaigns to sell their expertise in the Third World.

For Nippon Telegraph & Tele-phone Corp. and British Telecommunications PLC, operating their respective domestic telephone networks will remain the dominant business. But both see opportunities to create a useful sideline through overseas service units.

"We're putting a lot of increased effort in trying to export our skills." John A.C. King, managing director of BT's overseas division, said in an interview.

Telecommunications Imports Stir Limited Interest in Japan

LONDON - Japan does not appear likely to go on a buying space for foreign telecommunica-tions equipment, even though the steep rise of the yen this year has made imports much cheaper for the Hisashi Shinto, president and chief executive officer of Nippon Telegraph & Telephone Corp., NIT, said in an interview here Thursday that the yen's rise would help his company buy more foreign goods. But he said that Japanese makers still offer the best prices and quality for most equipment

"Nobody can compete with Jap-nese products which are manufactured on a mass-production basis," said Mr. Shinto, who visited London this week on a business trip.

Mr. Shinto indicated that NTT was interested in imports only of equipment and technology not yet available on a large scale in Japan. For instance, he said, U.S. satellite echnology is "far beyond" that of Japan, and certain foreign software Recent export success for the Tornado and Sea Harrier aircraft products are attractive.

When the company was smaller, he used to approve every product be-fore it was sold. That has changed, but only slightly. His attentive management style is still legendary within the company. One official at headquarters recalled the time Sir Terence "read everyone the riot act" when he found an unused sheet of paper in one of the office waste baskets.

"You can't do well without attention to all the details. You can't just fiddle with a bit of it. You have to have an idea, a concept that you pursue with conviction.

hame contine, the dynamic energy of the youngest creative fashion team in Paris, an uncompromising, old-fashioned idea of service, a brand new determination to define exclusive elegance for the contemporary woman: In spell-binding style, the house of Jean Parou has set its sights on maintaining that quintessence of quality that has been its byword since the legendary countrier established his business over 70 years ago.

"To be sure of perfection," says Jean de Moüy, Jean Parou's great-nephew and Parou president since 1980, "one must make everything oneself." So this 100 percent family-owned company continues to be one of the race countrie houses to design and produce every product bearing its

The hame countre is designed by Christian Lacroix, at 34 the same age as de Mouy; whose brother Guy, 32, head of the New York subsidiary, makes up the tripartite of this bright young usum all in their 30s. Lacroix, called "a calent to watch" by The New York Times, designs the couture clothes, the hats, which play a prominent part in his collections, and all accessories includng behs and shoes.

Patou's fabulous fragrance, Joy, "the costlest perfume in the world," was created by a Patou perfumer just as Jean Kerleo, the present house "nose" composes hunriously extravagant formu-les like the one for "1000" in 1972, based on the Osmanthus flower of China which only blooms for several bours each spring, a scented opulence only Patou would dare to produce.

In the same spirit, Patou is bringing out a rare "Book of Perfumes," containing the 12 fragrances of Ma Collection, the recently revived "parfums d'époque" launched be-tween 1925 and 1964. Available by special order, the three-volume work recounts the glittering history of the house and the stories of such evocative scents as Amour, Amour, Divine Folic and Normandie.

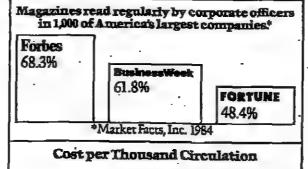

Exports account for 85 percent of perhane production, a 23 percent increase, with major markers evenly split between the United States and the Far East followed by Europe and the Middle East. To better control distribution, Patou repurchased the New York firm in 1982 and have established others in London, Milan, Geneva and Hong Kong. Pacou's dedication to what de Moüy calls "small is beautiful" is perfectly illustrated by their world renowned best-seller, Joy, whose rare natural ingredients mean production will always be exclusively limited. They will continue to concentrate on offering each client the same regal service in the things they do best: courture and fragrance. De Mouy's mission is to provide a climate where Patou designers can produce "the most exception-al things possible" which their loyal distinguished clientele has discovered are found nowhere else in the world. Like a rare Burgundy, Patou's designs will continue to be strictly limited and equally precious - a symbol of the peerless perfection of the best of the best.

SEC Chairman Proposes Electronic Certificates

BOCA RATON, Florida — The Securities and Exchange Commission chairman, John S.R. Shad, proposed Thursday that new issues of corporate and municipal bonds be made in the form of an electronic "global certificate" as a first step in saving money on engraving and delivery of securities certificates.

"It just has got to be incredibly better than shuffling all that paper," Mr. Shad said at a convention of the Securities Industry Association, a group of Wall Street securities traders. He said the securities industry spends vast sums on engraving, cutting, and delivering tons of securities certificates daily.

In addition, Mr. Shad said, millions of dollars in certificates are lost, stolen, mutilated and

THE WINE-DARK SEA

By Leonardo Sciascia. Translated from the Italian by Avril Bardoni, 142 pages. $14.9 Carcanet Press, 108 E. 31st Street, New York, N. Y. 10016

Reviewed by Herbert Mitgang

As a novelist and essayist, Leonardo Scias-cia is the most authentic voice writing in Sicily today. He remains in Palermo, avoiding the literary mainstream in Milan and Rome, spinning stories that unfold so naturally they seem derived from felk tales. Some are; they can begin with a great-grandfather who ran through the streets of Palermo with Garibaldi's Thousand, and suddenly turn into a story on Mafia vengeance.

The better-known Italo Calvino, who died in September, also drew strength from old tales for his fabulist novels.

In "The Wine-Dark Sea," a collection of short stories, Sciascia works his native soil realistically, without Calvino's literary flourishes, but he also has a few tricks up his sleeve. Quite often there is a double-twist because Sciascia's characters are cunning: their enemy always seems to be some higher authority — a landowner, the clergy, the Mafia, a police chief, whoever happens to run the govern Still, the author manages to find flowers in the island's cactus.

"The Wine-Dark Sea" is a good introduction to Sciascia, anthor of such novels as "Equal Danger," "A Man's Blessings," "Salt in the Wound" and, most recently, "Candido." Although "The Wine-Dark Sea" appeared in Italy a dozen years ago with the same Homeric phrase in its title ("Il Mare Colore del Vino"), it is now published in English for the first time with a fine translation by Avril Bardoni.

The 13 stories show Sciascias range. Some are hilarious, such as "Apocryphal Correspondence re Crowley," in which Benito Mussolini corresponds with the chief of police of a smit corresponds with the times of police of a small town in Sicily, ordering him to spy upon a British artist who is living with five young women in a villa and painting obscene fres-coes. It becomes a statement on the dictator. Another lighthearted story, "A Matter of Conscience, touches upon one of the favoring themes of Italian writers: cuckoldry, Among Sicilian writers who have also played with to subject in this century are Luigi Pirandello and Elio Vittorini, In Sciascia's modern tale, then is a feminist twist - the discovered young wife of the old lawyer ends up laughing at him. In "Mafia Western," the author returns to a subject he has handled powerfully in his nov. els. Sciascia does not romanticize killers, a 100 fundamental fault of American novelists and fundamental fault of American novelest and filmmakers. In his story, revenge pulls the trigger and blows up an assassin's car; the author is not enchanted by the Mafia's code of honor. Sciascia has often been categorized as a detective story writer. He is not, Like Pirandel. lo, he is a writer of metaphysical mysteries, rooted in human affairs.

FOXYBABY

By Elizabeth Jolley. 261 pages. $14.95. Viking Penguin Inc., 40 W. 23rd Street, New York, N.Y. 10010

Reviewed by Michiko Kakutani

HOW, wonders the heroine of "Foxybaby." has she gotten into such a ridiculous predicament? Here she is, Miss Alma Porch, novelist and lecturer, stuck in some godforsaken little town in Australia, trying to teach drama to a bunch of unhappy women, who are more intent on shedding a couple of pounds than thinking about art.

Can she really use them as a sounding board for her latest work of fiction? Can she inspire them to create something vaguely artistic themselves? Can she find, here, a respite from her own boring life at home?

Using this ludicrous situation as a spring-board, Elizabeth Jolley gets her third novel of to a fine, bouncy start.

Certainly, Jolley has a bright eye for the absurd — for the pretentious posturing of quote-mongering academics and for the impor-tunate inquiries of their philistine students. Indeed, Trinity College, as this glorified summer camp is called, turns out to be an awful place: students, like their tutors, are housed in cramped rooms, obliged to study with teachers barely capable of speaking English and subjected to classes in such matters as chicken-wire weaving.

They're starved on a diet of lettuce and lemon juice, forced to buy additional food on the local black market, and generally inconvenienced, embarrassed, and conned. Needless to say, the prim Miss Porch is appalled by Trinity College and wishes she had never agreed to come. A well-meaning spinster, she seems afflicted with an overwhelming self-consciousness, forever arranging her features into what she hopes are appropriate expressions of hope, interest, or sympathy, and trying to make soothing noises when she's at a loss for

Her imagination likes to take quirky little turns. It also has a way of embroidering the lives of people she has just encountered, in stantly turning them into fictional creations. When Mrs. Castle, for instance, starts dith-ering on about her poor darling daughter, her lovely son-in-law, and their four Siamese cats, Miss Porch conjures up, in her mind, a picture of the Castle home, in which the lonely old woman makes a pest of herself in her children's

The other characters Miss Porch meets Trinity tend to be as one-dimensional as Mrs. Castle.

The narrow, cartoon-like characterization leads to some very amusing, if broadly drawn, moments, but it creates problems when Jolley makes it clear that she does not merely want to write a straightforward satire, that she also wants to make a commentary on the consequences of loneliness and isolation.

As she did in her last novel, "Miss Peabody's Inheritance." Jolley tries to use the overall narrative structure to reflect and refract the relationships that exist between the author of a work of fiction, its characters and its audience. But this time, the three elements — that is, Alma Porch, her fictional creations and her students — seem too filmsy to support such a thesis, the geometry that develops between them, all 100 predictable and pat.

On the diagramed deal, the North and West hands are shown, and West has to decide what to do after the first three tricks. He has led a spade, and his partner's jack has been taken by the declarer's king.

South crosses to the diamond queen and leads a club on which East plays the eight and declarer the queen. West has to decide whether to take the king, and if he does take it, what to do next. Looking at four hands this is easy, but looking at just two it is much harder.

East played the diamond deuce when that suit was led, and would not hold up the ace. So South appears to have four club tricks three have four club tricks three diamond tricks, the heart ace and the spade king.

Holding up the club king would not make sense, for South might be able to run nine tricks. So West wins and should play the spade ace since that suit offers the only real chance for the defense. As it happens the queen falls and defense takes live tricks.

Walton's 'Old Days' End With New Team

By George Vecsey New York Times Service

NEW YORK - The Boston Celtics did not want Bill Walton to feel they were skeptical about his past quests into the counter-culture, so they went out of their way to extend a welcome when he joined the team this September. Larry Bird, for example, ambled up to Walton at one of the early practices and offered a pleasant, "Hey, where's the ponytail and the Walton's rough-hewn features broke into a smile as he replied, Those days are over." And it was about that time Walton decided he was going to like the Boston Celtics even more than be had imagined. "I love being here, I really love it," Walton said recently.

[Walton was superb Wednesday night at East Rotherford, New Jer-sey, as the Celtics extended their ing streak to nine games with a 130-111 victory over the Nets, The Los Angeles Times reported.

[Walton played just 23 minutes and scored eight points. But he had 13 rebounds to trigger numerous fastbreaks that helped the Celtics shoot a red-hot 62.2 percent in the

The unselfish game be played for John Wooden at UCLA and Jack Ramsay at Portland has made it seem that his red hair and rustic jolly-green-giant looks have been jutting above Celtic uniform

"This reminds me of UCLA." he said. "Going on the road, every gym sold out, everyone trying to make their season by beating us, yet everybody appreciating us, a lot of fans on the road rooting for us. I love it. It's a lot of fun." He had fun recently against the New York Knicks, coming off the bench as a substitute for Robert Parish, playing 19 minutes, scoring 5 points with 11 rebounds, one below Parish, the game leader. "Minutes?" Walton mused, "To me, it's more important to the athlete to win. I can't be out there for a long time anymore, physically. I suffer stress fractures when I do. This is a great team for me to come

Bird came into the league in 1979-80, when Walton was playing 14 abortive games for San Diego between stress fractures. Bird knew that Walton was controversial, but he did not know that Walton's '60s idealism had often found expression in an unselfish pass, a last-second blocked shot. "I didn't know what kind of a guy he was," Bird admitted. "I didn't know what his morale was like. I found out he loves the game of baskethall."

The Celtics had been looking to move Cedric Maxwell because they did not feel he fought back hard enough from knee problems last season. They received a man who had already fought back, and was willing to play behind Parish.

"Bill Walton means that Robert can stretch himself out for seven

As Socrates Would Say, It's a Whole New Ball Game

Washington Post Service No. 3 ($438,256) in 1985.

The biggest drop was by the Chicago White Sox, falling $98,793 in average salary from 1984 to go WASHINGTON - Vince Lombardi, George Halas and Knute Rockne were football coaches, period. They forged strategies and molded men. Despite ruling their teams with a Nietzschean "will to power," they were never thought of as anything but football leagner got a $2.6 percent raise last year, with the earnings growing from $329,408 to $371,157. Today they would be as obsolete as the flying wedge. In 1985, football coaches must be philosophers first and foremost. Just listen to the "color" analysis on the weekend's professional games and you will hear some-thing like this:

"Well, John it's third and short; what's Coach Shula's philosophy in this situation?" "The beauty of his thinking here, Pat, is that he studiously avoids the dialectic altogether. I suppose you could call him an exis-tentialist; he's liable to do anything." As the play is called, John is proven correct.

Ironically, Lombardi himself, the archetypal coach, may have unconsciously sown the seeds of the modern philosopher-coach. Students of National Football League history describe his pithy "run for daylight" tenet as a thinly diagnised Sartrian exposition of ab-solute freedom. On the other side of the argument, and the scrimmage line, Lombardi heralded the linebacker's total freedom to obliterate that daylight, ergo the ballcarrier.

By David Holahan

The late mentor of the Green Bay Packers is also famous for his Nietzschean insistence on excellence and superhuman exertions by his players. (Some scholars insist he was not molding men, but supermen.) "Wirming isn't everything." Lombardi averred, "It's the only thing." That philosophy, although it was not such in his time, has had a profound influence on 20th century NFL thought. Modern football also has been influenced by Karl Marx, who foresaw a century ago that in its advanced stages the sport would resort to specialization and an increasing di-vision of labor. No one plays "both ways" anymore. In fact, hardly anyone plays one way the entire game. There are "special teams" and "situation players" galore, like the third-down pass-catching halfback. There are run specialists and pass specialists on defense as well. Recently, many teams have adopted a two-place-kicker philosophy: one man for field goals and extra points and another for kicking off.

As football has grown exponentially more complex, schools of thought have proliferated. One trend can clearly be termed Orwellian: Big Coach (not the quarterback, as in days of yore) calls all the plays from the sideline. Only three of 28 NFL teams — and fewer and fewer college squads - grant their field generals the freedom to choose the of-preceded them, today's philosopher-coache embrace monotheism; conversely, atheism has no place in the locker room. Indeed, most have advanced this theory a bit by syllogizing thusly: If there is a God and if he cares about mankind, he must logically be an avid, activist fan of gridiron gyrations. Post-Super Bowl interviews with winning coaches are always sprinkled liberally with praise and credit to the Almighty, who seems to throw his support to a different team each year.

Like a team on a winning streak, philosoply is gaining momentum in the NFL. During a recent preseason game one television commentator observed: "Will you look at the size of that left tackle! Well, that's been the Raider philosophy: huge linemen." Probably the next great intellectual up-heaval in pro football will be an attempt to somehow integrate and homogenize these numerous and diverse schools of thought. An anthology of Eric Holfer-like aphorisms -"No pain, no gain," "Newspaper clippings don't make tackles" — also would be handy. Perhaps someday soon we will see Bill Walsh of the San Francisco 49ers or Tom going down the drain?" I said. They said they knew what I was talking about. I was talking about the disgusting condition character-ized by children settled in front of television sets watching cops wear pastel wardrobes.

I specied at their innocence, CIVing. "The arrogant innocence of children! How can you think that I, who spent the best Saturday afternoons of my life watching Buster Crabbe dashing about the planet Mongo in the fanciest-cut long johns ever seen on the silver screen

I had forgotten what I was say-

"Country going down the drain," murmured the oldest child as he rose to refresh his glass. "Exactly," I said. "In my day I had to give up Buster Crabbe on the planet Mongo before I could drink bourbon."

A remarkable onset of violence distracted their attention from my philosophical musings. When it subsided I put the question to them squarely:

"Will you all promise your old dad here and now that you will never pay for three bananas by writing a check?"

They looked mildly curious. I them to listen because a check was too serious to be used for buving three bananas.

'Am I getting through? Do you less we start showing some respect for money, the country's going down the drain? "I understand, dad," said the lege graduate. "You're saying we should always pay for our bananas with a credit card." Is it any wonder that President Reagan himself, the greatest bal-anced-budget man the United States has produced since who knows when — is it any wonder that he doubled the national debt in a single presidential term?

Some truly evil young people, but beautifully coiffed, were firing automatic weapons in faraway corrupt Miami on the TV screen.

People who write checks for three bananas at the supermarket are people too innocent to be scared when they ask a person if dinner at La Rive Coach is expensive and that person replies, Take your checkbook."

"That's 'Rive Gauche,' dad, not 'Rive Coach,' " said the girl with her college degree that, now that I thought of it, had been paid for with checks serious enough to buy an entire boatload of bananas and a banana-republic dictator.

The TV had passed from bloodletting into its marketing mode. Actors disguised as bankers seemed to be urging the children to borrow sums of money to establish heavy industrial plants. The younger boy, who is interested in antiques, took the opportunity to ask why people used to get scared when, having asked whether dinner at La Rive Whichever was expensive, they were told, "Take your checkbook."

Because when money was still accorded a little respect in this country," I said, "people used their checkbooks only for the most serious purchases, like buying a car, a house, a trip to Europe -

"Miami Vice" resumed with screams, gunfire and contemporary music. A revoltingly evil man was buying a car, a house, a trip to Europe and paying with cash. Be-fore he took off for Europe, I knew, that man would go to the super-market, buy three bananas to help him survive the airline food and pay for them by writing a check. No wonder we're going down the

"You mean to hell in a hand basket," said the oldest child as he rose to refresh his bourbon.

Zoe Caldwell: Seeking Lillian Hellman's 'Clinker'

By David Richards

Washington Past Service OFFSTAGE, she usually dresses all in black. Today she is wearing a black coat, black slacks, black sweater over black blouse, and a black watchband. On stage, however, the Australian-born actress Zoe Caldwell, three times a Tony winner, goes from black and white to living color. At the Kennedy Center's Terrace Theater in Washington, through Dec. 14, she is bringing to life Lillian Hellman in "Lillian," a new one-woman show.

Written by William Luce who fashioned "The Belle of Amherst" out of the life and poetry of Emily Dickinson — and directed by Caldwell's husband, the producer Robert Whitehead, "Lillian" is based on the autobiographical writings of a woman who was as celebrated for her stormy relationship with the writ-er Dashiell Hammett, and their refusal to bow before the House Committee on Un-American Activities and Senator Joseph Mc-Carthy, as she was for plays such as "The Little Foxes," "Watch on the Rhine" and "The Children's

"It really has been the most difficult thing I've ever done," said Caldwell, 52. "I had morning sickness every day of rehearsals. Ask Robert! There was some-thing in me that just didn't want to give myself over to Lillian. The play is set in 1961 in the antercom of a hospital, two hours before Dash dies, and the whole evening has to be supported by her emo-tional response to his dying. So it isn't a one-woman show where you go out and tell a lot of stories and jokes. To do it, I have to be totally inhabited by Lillian I know that sounds like spooky stuff. But it really was most pain-

For months, she pored over Hellman's writings, scrutinized her on videotape, talked with anyone who had a firsthand anecdote or impression. She even took up cigarettes again, since "it seemed like Lillian always had smoke somewhere around her." But for the longest time, she couldn't find what she calls "the clinker." "It's what I have to find in order to play any part - the thing

She was the only daughter. vulnerable. Everybody has a clinker. It usually turns up quite early in life. Whatever happens later, you can trace it back to the clinker. But in Lillian's case, I couldn't find it.

"I kept saying to Robert, "Everyone talks about Lillian's femiminity.' And she was deeply feminine, despite this image people have of her as a tough, smoking lady. She was a flirtatious Southern belle. She spent a lot of money on clothes. She always had her nails and her hair done. And yet there in the middle of her face was this nose - not just the nose she was born with, but this bashed-up nose. A woman who spends such an inordinate amount of money on her personal appearance in this day and age would have that nose tended to. But she never did. In all her photographs, it's like this great badge of courage she wears. That's the clinker!"

Caldwell clapped her hands tri-umphantly, then laid out the evidence that unlocked the puzzle. "I discovered that in puberty, Lil-make bad trouble for people." That helped me understand all the despair and disturbance she suffered, for example, in her sexual relationship with Dash, who had a lot of other ladies. It helped explain her feeling for the blacks. She had decency "She also had a lot of enemies and I suppose I'll get flack from some, saying how dare I make people love Lillian. But I just wish we had a few more Lillians. What we're lacking nowadays is individuality."

Her ability stems, she believes, from her clinker: a small motor-skills disability she has had since childhood. She cannot write legioly, or sew on a button. Broadway never saw her until 1966. As Anne Bancroft's under-study in "The Devils," she was rushed into the second act when the star injured her back. Later that year, Tennessee Williams' short-lived but vividly surrealistic "Slapstick Tragedy" brought Caldwell her first Tony award. In 1968, for "The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie," she won her second Tony. The third came in 1982 for the Kennedy Center's production of "Medea" She has amassed a sheaf of laudatory nonces - and perhaps the rudest pan on record, from John Simon, who found Caldwell in the off-Broadway production of "Colette" "unattractive in every part of the face, body and limbs, though I must admit I have not examined her teeth." "Of course, something like that hurts," Caldwell acknowledged. But nothing beyond hurt. You're not paralyzed by a critic like John Simon. You have to respect someone's opinion before you can be paralyzed by it. By a Harold Churman, a Brooks Atkinson, a Walter Kerr, I could be paralyzed." When she was 36 she married

Whitehead and put her career into low gear. They have two sons —Charles, 13, and Sam, 16. For a while, Caldwell said, she "just hung in there with the boys to make sure they grew into reason-ably solid citizens." The family lives in Pound Ridge, New York.

A college lecturer in Scotland says Andrea Mantegoa's "Adora-tion of the Magi," for which the J. His comment a followed a lecture by Peter Collins at the Duncan of Jordanstone College of Art in Dundee. Collins, 50. spoke about his doubts after arguing his case in letters to newspa pers. The Times of London devoted half a page to the subject Wednesday. "No one agrees with Collins so far," wrote the newspaper's art sales reporter, Geraldine Norman, adding: "For my money, it's genu-ine." Collins contends that a metal vessel in the picture looks like a 19th-century hookah base, that the turbans of the Magi are not those of Mantegna's day, that the Virgin is wearing a turban and that her robe appears to have a lapel, and that two of the figures appear to be borrowed from other Mantegna works, William Mostyn-Owen, who cataloged the painting for Chris-tie's, said be considered Collins's arguments "nonsensical."
